

WORKING WITH SELF-HARM IN COUNSELLING AND PSYCHOTHERAPY

24th Oct 2014 — 09:30 to 16:00

Dr Andrew Reeves will lead a workshop on working with self-harm in counselling and psychotherapy.

Working with clients who self-harm can be both difficult and distressing. Many clients who present in counselling and psychotherapy sessions self-harm as a means of coping with difficult and challenging feelings. However, self-harm often goes beyond coping strategies, becoming a complex means of communication.

Counsellors and psychotherapists may experience a number of difficult feelings in response to self-harm. As a result they may attempt to distance themselves from it. However, Andrew Reeves argues that self-harm and self-injury are pervasive processes and that one of the keys to understanding the self-harming behaviour of others is to recognise and relate to it in ourselves.

Cost £80 including tea, coffee and lunch (£70 for students). For bookings made before 27th July, there will be an 'early bird' rate of £70. Group discounts are also available.

6 hours CPD. A signed certificate of attendance will be provided.
